Identity, Intelligence and AI Re-shaping Cyber Security

April has spotlighted a shift in cyber security priorities, where identity, AI, and intelligence converge to redefine defence strategies. From funding rounds accelerating innovation to leadership moves strengthening global ecosystems, the sector is evolving rapidly. This month's insights explore how organisations are simplifying threat intelligence, securing AI-driven environments, and adapting to increasingly complex risk landscapes.

 QUOINTELLIGENCE

QuoIntelligence Secures €7.3M to Transform Threat Intelligence

Delivering fully processed threat intelligence is becoming essential as regulatory pressures increase across Europe.

QuoIntelligence's latest funding round highlights demand for ready-to-act insights that remove the need for in-house expertise. By combining AI-driven analysis with human oversight, the company is simplifying complex intelligence workflows while ensuring compliance with regional data sovereignty requirements and accelerating time to value for mid-market organisations.

 CLAROTY

Claroty Strengthens Global Channel Strategy with Key Appointment

A strategic leadership hire signals continued momentum in cyber-physical systems protection.

Claroty's appointment of John Ryan reflects a focus on scaling its global partner ecosystem and enhancing go-to-market execution. With extensive experience across leading security vendors, his arrival is expected to drive stronger collaboration, expand market reach, and support organisations in reducing operational risk across critical infrastructure environments.

Industry News

Silverfort and SentinelOne Unite Identity and Endpoint Security

A deeper integration between identity and endpoint security is reshaping real-time defence. By creating a shared control layer, this partnership enables faster detection and coordinated response across environments. The approach reduces investigation time and strengthens protection against identity-based threats, particularly as non-human identities continue to grow in scale and complexity.

Linx Security Raises $50M to Address Identity Risk Explosion

With identity now central to enterprise risk, Linx Security's latest funding reflects the urgency of modern governance solutions. Its AI-driven platform enables continuous monitoring and automated remediation across human and machine identities. As organisations struggle with increasing identity volumes, this approach supports real-time visibility while reducing operational strain on security teams.

Cloudsmith Secures $72M to Safeguard AI-Driven Software Supply Chains

As AI accelerates software development, securing the supply chain has become critical. Cloudsmith's recent investment will fuel innovation in managing and protecting software artifacts at scale. The platform provides visibility and governance across dependencies, helping enterprises maintain control and compliance while navigating the risks introduced by AI-generated code.

Artemis Emerges from Stealth with $70M for AI-Native Defence

A new approach to detection and response is gaining traction as Artemis introduces an AI-native platform built on contextual understanding. By modelling entire environments and automating investigations, the company aims to reduce response times significantly. This signals a broader shift toward intelligent, adaptive security systems that move beyond alerts to deliver actionable insight.
